The Smell Test

Editor:

I have been retired now for 15 years. My hearing isn't what it used to be and I have to wear glasses when I drive. However, my nose still works and something smells about the current situation with the Public Defender's Office ("Nothing in Writing," July 27).

When all nine deputy public defenders send a letter to the supervisors alleging that the new hire is incompetent and unqualified, that certainly creates an olfactory effect.

During a 45-year teaching career, I saw my share of politics when it came to hiring instructors. In more than a few cases, a person was hired not on the basis of what that person knew but rather on the basis of whom that person knew.

Considering the fact that the new public defender's resume was not exactly sparkling, I wonder what would happen if someone were to investigate that particular thread.

Bill Morris, Eureka

Editor:

In preparing for his lawsuit against the county arguing that Humboldt County Public Defender David Marcus is unqualified under California statute, Patrik Griego deposed Mr. Marcus on July 3. During the approximately 80 minutes of the deposition, Mr. Griego posed a series of questions to Mr. Marcus, who responded under oath. Many of Mr. Griego's questions concerned Mr. Marcus' legal work prior to being hired by Humboldt County in February of 2017. Many of Mr. Marcus answers indicated memory lapses, and below is a tally of some of his responses:

"I don't recall the specific matter:" 1
"I don't recall for sure:" 1
"Not that I recall:" 9
"I'm not sure:" 6
"Not that I know of:" 3
"I'm not sure I didn't, but I'm not sure that I did:" 1
"I'm not positive on that particular matter:" 1
"I don't recall:" 1
"I'm not certain:" 1
"Not that I recall specifically:" 1
"Not that I'm certain about:" 1
"Not that I'm aware of:" 1
"No specific recollection:" 3
"Not for sure:" 2
"I can't remember for sure:" 1

Was Mr. Marcus dodging the questions or does he just have poor memory skills? Either way, it's not good.

Marilyn Andrews, Arcata

A 'Trumpian' Rant

Editor:

I am extremely disappointed to see the NCJ ("It's Watson for the Interim," July 27) and its usually highly competent reporter Linda Stansberry give Steve Watson an unchallenged venue to present a completely non-tested theory: "... that many of the homeless and transient people in Eureka were attracted to the area by the pot industry"

We would love to conduct scientific studies to test urban-legend "theories" such as this but governmental, law enforcement and media hostility to our region's largest multibillion-dollar industry is such that funding opportunities for large-scale social science research projects are severely constrained.

The Journal/Stansberry should have tempered this Trumpian-level rant with sources working with the homeless or in the industry. Faculty such as myself at Humboldt State University's Institute for Interdisciplinary Marijuana Research is readily available for comment, if all else fails. Considering the high level of ad revenue the Journal receives from cannabis-related businesses, it is the least the citizens of Humboldt should expect.

Fred Krissman, Eureka

Duck!

Editor:

Barry Evans' article ("Westworld vs. Realworld," July 27) on the "boondoggle" of free will was a pleasant surprise. I was happy to learn that there is someone around who agrees with me.

Benjamin Libet's discovery of the half-second it takes for your brain to build a conscious thought completely undermines the notion of free will. Whatever you're thinking about right now has been in the pipeline for a half-second already. How do you have any conscious control over that which is producing your consciousness?

Beyond the issue of free will, the picture gets even more complicated when you consider that consciousness itself is an illusion. What you see is not what's out there. "Out there" there are no such things as color, sound, texture or smells. You brain creates all of them (collectively called qualia) and nobody knows yet how the brain does it.

Optical illusions nicely illustrate this business of seeing what's not really there but only on a small scale; it really applies to the whole of consciousness.

What you "see" is an internal model of reality. At about 40 frames per second (20 to 90 depending on the urgency) your brain shows you an internal movie of what it guessed things would be like in half a second. Since it took about a half-second for the picture to work its way through the pipeline, what pops up in your awareness coincides with the impinging reality. Any difference between the prediction and newly arriving signals sets off alarm bells.

And just to really confuse things, your perception of "now" as an instant in time is actually an interval of time (about 1/10 of a second in duration as I recall) during which events are rearranged in your memory to make logical sense — like the conviction that you saw that baseball

Fog

Fog languidly cloaks
this seaside town spreading over rooftop and door stoop creeping into the cracks of my soul
slowly breaking brick apart
with an imposing silence
I have learned not to hear.
Fog has no mercy.
It hovers cruelly over this town relentless in summer
like the focused stillness of a velvet, black cat
ready to pounce,
a precious, winged creature
she will not spare.
There is no escape.
This fog
will break you like tree roots under a crumbling sidewalk,
like the moss growing on your back like the weeds growing in your ears feel the slow decaying of your heart you are deaf to the outside world.
Yet redwood trees release sighs of dearness damp, dripping.
I lean back
in my rocking chair
and wait
endlessly
for the generous sun-cast days of autumn.

Where Have the Birds Gone?

Editor:

Thank you, Amy Gustin, for continuing to speak out for wildlife ("Our Shrinking Habitat," July 6). Is anyone listening?

My property is mostly forested. Until a few years ago, the woods were criss-crossed with deer paths. Brush in the clearings was nibbled down and my pet roses had to be fenced. Squirrels rustled the leaves overhead and argued with one another. Hawks and eagles perched on the treetops and dived for prey in the meadow. Wild turkeys browsed in the tall grass.

All are now conspicuous by their absence. The woods have become silent and empty. Very few songbirds remain.

Where are the owl-lovers of yesteryear, they who helped run Big Timber out of town? Perhaps they've forgotten that owls rely on their acute senses of sight and hearing to hunt in the dark. Both of these are severly compromised by traffic and generator noise, and glowing hoops. Diminished territory and natural prey have forced many animals to depend on garbage dumps and domestic livestock for their survival.

While county officials tweak ordinances and haggle over land usage, the Green Rush destroys more and more of our biodiversity and quality of life.

Please, let's get it under control and have peace again.

Betty Crowder, Honeydew

Correction

The Journal's July 17 blog post about the proposal to move a welcome center into the Clarke Museum ("Clarke Museum May Make Room for Welcome Center") inaccurately stated that the museum's current Apothecary exhibit might become a bar. In fact, the exhibit may be moved to make room for a tasting room and café. The Journal regrets the error.

The Bridgeville Beat

Resident deputies return to rural Humboldt

By Linda Stansberry
linda@northcoastjournal.com

Humboldt County Sheriff's deputy Ben Filippini is 24 years old and just three years out of College of the Redwood's Police Academy. Beneath the back of his short blond hair, his neck is sunburned a dark red where a tactical helmet and mask did not cover his skin at a recent outdoor training session. He's quick to smile, quick to laugh and he listens more than he talks. All of these things work in his favor at his current job — resident deputy for State Route 36 from Fortuna to Blocksburg.

Filippini's appointment as a rural deputy is one of several positions funded by Measure Z, a sales tax measure that county voters passed in November of 2014. A recent report by the Humboldt County Civil Grand Jury described rural areas of the county as being "seriously underserved by law enforcement and other emergency services." Among the problems described were slow response times to 911 calls, fears of retribution from criminals should someone call law enforcement and — in Eastern Humboldt County — a "culture of 'lawlessness' which prevails due to the lack of law enforcement services." (The Humboldt County Sheriff's Office has yet to formally respond to the report.)

Filippini knows the region and its culture well. He grew up near Hydesville, just outside Fortuna, although he went to Ferndale High School. It's common for people to examine his name badge and ask about his father or grandfather. Many of the people he talks to on his daily beat, driving from Fortuna to Bridgeville and back, are family friends or neighbors. It's a different dynamic than the one he was trained to handle at the police academy, or the one he experienced when working the graveyard shift in Eureka.

"You handle things a little different," he says. "If people you know are messing up, they don't get any wiggle room, but you find your formula."

According to the grand jury report, roughly two-thirds of the county's population live in rural or unincorporated areas. Until 2008, many of those areas had their own resident deputies. But a nationwide recession and subsequent budget cuts in the sheriff's office led to the loss of resident deputy positions and staffing of substations of many rural areas, including Garberville and Willow Creek.

Measure Z's passage allowed the HCSO to unfreeze 30 vacant positions and staff the Garberville and Willow Creek substations. Orick, Orleans and Bridgeville now have resident deputies, and efforts are underway to bring community service officers to Eastern and Southern Humboldt. Finding funding and housing for these positions continues to be a challenge, and a combination of a lengthy hiring process and poor retention rates due to low salaries exacerbates the issue. And, while residents in these outlying areas consistently express concerns in community meetings about crime and criminal behavior, officers still struggle with establishing trust in regions that have effectively had to police themselves for close to a decade, even as cannabis cultivation grew exponentially.

"We just hear about a fraction of what goes on," Filippini says. While he assists the county's Drug Enforcement Unit on raids, his primary concern is the criminal issues sometimes associated with grow ops, such as theft and rape, not ferreting out illegal scenes.

"At the end of the day, we don't care about the plants, we care about the people," he says.

The unwillingness of some victims to report crimes or follow up can be frustrating for the deputy. He knows where the hot spots of crime and dysfunction are — the house where a mentally ill man beats his wife, the trailer where an elderly woman has a squatter's nest of heroin addicts, the recently permitted grow where chainsaws and gasoline routinely disappear — but more often than not, people just want to vent, not file a formal report. And if they don't want to officially report a crime, there's not much Filippini can do besides listen.

Such is the case when he gets his first call of a day, from a road rage incident on U.S. Highway 101, where a man flipped off a bad driver and had a pistol pointed at him in return. Although the call happened off his beat, close to College of the Redwoods, he goes to the victim's business and takes a report anyway, nodding and writing down a description of the brandisher and his car. But when he asks the man if he would like to "be a victim of a crime," the man says no. Filippini nods amiably, though he says afterward, "If you don't have a victim, you don't have a crime." A different deputy will try to track down the gun waver and check as to whether his weapons are registered, but he won't arrest him for "brandishing" without the witness' testimony.

"It's still really weird out this way," he says. "Half the population is really excited I'm here, the other half would rather handle it on their own."

Heading east toward Bridgeville, Filippini gets a call on his flip phone. He listens closely to the voice on the other end, repeats an address and gives an ETA. It's a Hydesville resident complaining about people speeding on a private road. Filippini will go and, after the obligatory questions about his father and grandfather, patiently listen to the complainant's long oral history of bad driving and near-misses on the shared road. Although he sees action — Filippini has been a first responder to several murder scenes and broken up his share of domestic disputes — a great many of his calls are about bad neighbors, bad drivers, trespassing and other matters that won't necessarily generate a report, much less an arrest. The trespassing and property line disputes can be particularly time consuming. He usually refers people to the county surveyor to get their boundaries redrawn. But nevertheless, he listens. He drives down backroads at the request of Neighborhood Watch participants, making his presence known. He stops and talks to senior citizens on their morning walks, catching up on gossip. He follows up on calls about loud music and public nudity, and when the property maps inevitably come out, he examines them and nods politely while slapping mosquitoes. Part of it might be his upbringing — his dad's a retired Marine, his mom a schoolteacher — but a larger part is self-preservation.

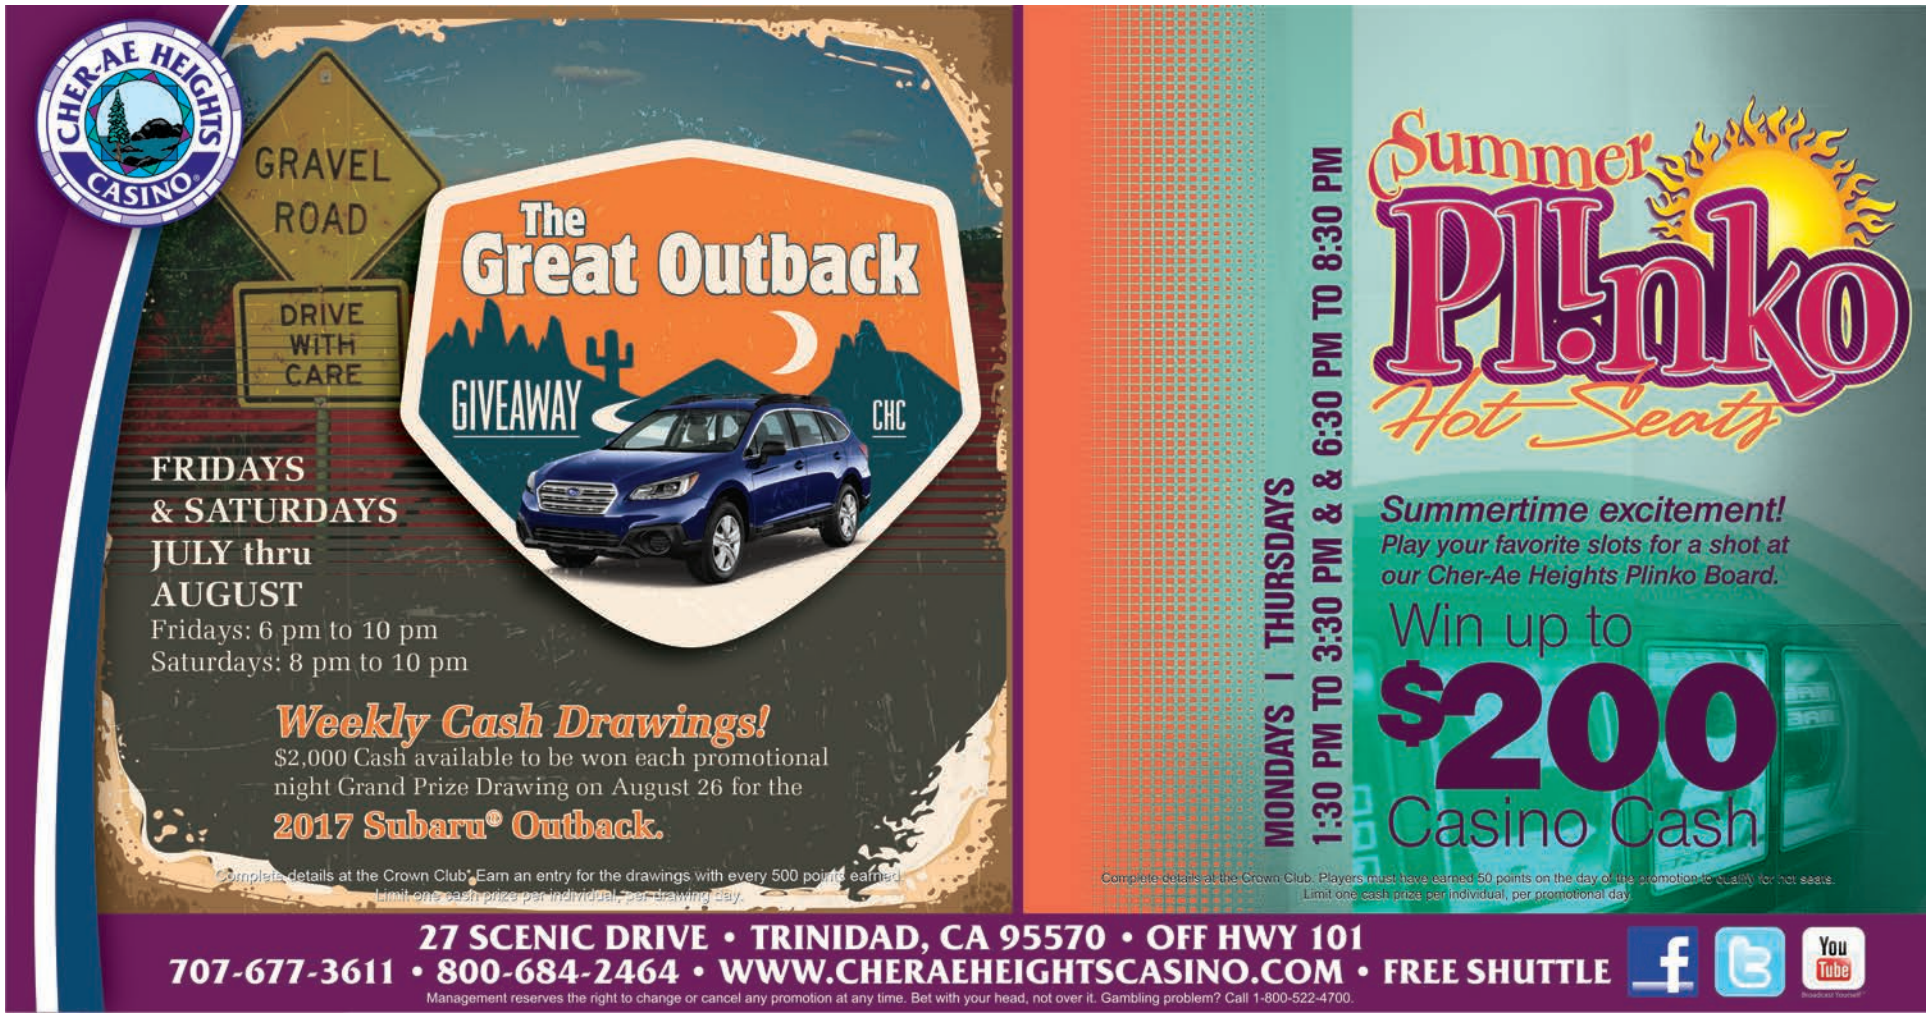

"Being out here by myself, the last thing you want is to make people angry with you," he says. "You're so far away from back up. You've got to pick and choose your battles."

And when he chooses a battle, he tries to be ready. Filippini trains seven days a week — cardio, free weights and jiu jitsu — to make himself as hard a target as possible. Working alone in one of the most remote regions of the county, he wants to be able to put up a good fight. Such was the case when he spotted a wanted warrant suspect — Wade Harris — who had broken down on State Route 36 on June 14. Filippini got out of his car to talk to Harris, who allegedly shouted, "I'm not going to let you take me, you're going to have to kill me." After a short chase through the brush, Filippini tackled and subdued Harris, taking him into custody.

News about the incident broke on local media before Filippini could tell his mom he was safe and she left several frantic messages on his phone wanting to make sure he was OK. The deputy says when he finally called back, she gave him an earful.

A Snowball's Chance in D.C.

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

U.S. Sen. Cory Booker introduced a bill Aug. 1 that would legalize marijuana federally.

"Our country's drug laws are badly broken and need to be fixed," the New Jersey Democrat said in a statement. "They don't make our communities any safer — instead they divert critical resources from fighting violent crimes, tear families apart, unfairly impact low-income communities and communities of color, and waste billions of taxpayer dollars each year."

The bill, dubbed the Marijuana Justice Act, would remove cannabis entirely from the Controlled Substance Act and could be implemented retroactively, meaning it could expunge the records of scores of folks convicted in past possession cases. It would also earmark budget savings from legalization to be spent encouraging restrictive states to loosen local laws.

As the bill's name attests, Booker views this as a social justice issue and there's plenty of data to back him up. The American Civil Liberties Union analyzed cannabis-related criminal cases from 2001 through 2010 and found more than 8 million Americans had been arrested for possession, use or distribution. But while black and white people report using marijuana at similar rates, black people are nearly four times more likely to be the subject of a possession arrest, the ACLU found.

But in addition to giving some police a tool to disproportionately incarcerate people of color, marijuana's current federal status also brings almost a blanket prohibition on badly needed research on cannabis, which some studies have linked to everything from reducing opioid overdose rates to improving the memory of dementia patients. Booker's bill would end that, paving the way for real research.

But it should be noted that a snowball in hell is going to fare better than Booker's bill, which has exactly zero chance of passing both houses of Congress and being signed into law under President Donald Trump. Now, you might say, "Wait, haven't 29 states legalized recreational or medical marijuana at this point? Aren't we experiencing a sea change?" While it's true that 21 states have legalized medical marijuana and another eight have green-lighted recreational use, very few of those — and none of the recreational use laws — came from state legislatures. They were voter-passed initiatives. Lawmakers, it seems, are trailing far behind the general public, 57 percent of which supports federal legalization, according to an October Pew Research Center survey.

Federal legalization efforts far more timid than Booker's have been introduced annually for close to two decades and not one has even gone to hearing. And lest we forget, that includes some years when Democrats controlled the House and the Senate and admitted former tokers inhabited the White House. Now we have Republican majorities in both houses and a president who appointed a drug war crusader and eradication evangelist as the nation's chief law enforcement officer.

But snowball's chance aside, there are some really positive aspects to Booker's legislation, if you're among the rational Americans who believe the war on drugs has been an abject failure. First and foremost, Booker is currently being hyped as one of the Democratic anointeds for a potential presidential bid in 2020. The fact that he doesn't view introducing this legislation as some kind of scarlet letter that would leave him among the Ralph Naders of the world is a sign that views — even among the D.C. bigwigs and campaign consultants — are starting to change. The bill is also stronger than many of its predecessors, most of which simply relegated the issue back to states and would have done nothing to expunge records and bring some sort of retroactive justice to the conversation. The mere fact that Booker addressed the issue through a social justice lens represents progress. It's also worth noting that Booker's introduction of the bill made headlines in virtually every major news outlet.

So in short, there's a lot to like about Booker's bill. Just not its chances to become law.

Goodbye MAC, Hello Waterfront Treatment Services

The dramatic debate in Washington, D.C., over the fate of national healthcare policy almost scuttled plans to bring more addiction treatment to Humboldt County.

A July 18 vote by the Eureka City Council allowed City Manager Greg Sparks to negotiate a lease agreement for the property at 139 Y St., formerly known as the Multiple Assistance Center. The MAC, which has been used as a transitional facility for homeless folks, will see a new incarnation as Waterfront Treatment Services, a detox and residential treatment facility for people struggling with addiction. The facility will be managed by the Redwood Coast Action Agency and Alcohol Drug Care Services. St. Joseph Hospital, under Providence St. Joseph and the Well Being Trust, recently administered a $1.6 million grant to sponsor "the first and only dual-diagnosis, medical detoxification and residential treatment facility in the county" for its first 18 months.

John McManus, who helms ADCS, has been trying for several years to implement a medically-based detox in Eureka. ADCS's current detox center relies on St. Joseph Hospital to medically assess patients and clear them before they're admitted to treatment. Withdrawal from some drugs, including alcohol, can be fatal or life-endangering and require medical intervention. Drug MediCal, a program covered under the Affordable Care Act, offers reimbursement for these services. His efforts to get ADCS services and medical detox covered under MediCal were hampered by infrastructure problems in ADCS buildings, many of which were built in the 1930s and could not be brought up to compliance to be eligible for MediCal.

"It's finally happened," McManus told the Journal. "The way it's come together is better than I could have ever imagined."

Martha Shanahan, director of community benefits at St. Joseph, said ADCS has been operating on a "shoestring" budget as McManus tried to bring together the necessary pieces to best serve his patients: staff, location and money.

Meanwhile the MAC, which was operating as a homeless intake and transitional housing facility, was experiencing its own chicken-egg problem around homelessness. According to the summary prepared by Melinda Peterson, the city's housing project manager, the persistent problem of substance use disorders "severely negatively affected the long-term success of program participants."

Peterson stated that "close to 90 percent of participants were diagnosed with either mental illness, Substance Use Disorder, or both. Many program participants have been unable to successfully complete the process to housing because of their substance use disorder(s)."

So marrying the addiction program in need of a modern facility and the facility in need of comprehensive treatment seems like a win-win for both entities, and most importantly, a community which has an extremely high rate of addiction, addiction-related diseases and deaths due to opiate overdose. Previous Journal coverage has examined our region's dearth of comprehensive treatment for addicts and alcoholics.

But in order for the program to continue, a continuous funding stream needs to be in place, and until recently, the fate of Drug MediCal was in question. Shanahan says that it was touch-and-go for a while as Congress wrestled over a partial or complete repeal of the ACA, which would have put MediCal funding in question, meaning the program might have petered out once granting funding was used up. But they pushed forward with the hope the funding would stay in place and, after several years of struggle, the right formula of time, place and money seems to have coalesced to bring McManus' vision to fruition. St. Joseph is also establishing a program called Humboldt Accountable Community for Health, a branch of a national program devoted to improving health outcomes, particularly in regards to mental health and addiction.

"This is really going to kind of raise the bar to expand capacity and provide a higher quality, better level of care for folks needing those detox services, also treatment services," says Shanahan.

The 30-day residential treatment program, which will implement case management from RCAA to help connect patients with resources, such as housing after treatment, is expected to open this September. Residents will have the option to stay up to a maximum of six months, depending on their case. According to the city's summary, all previous residents of the MAC have been housed and "it is an expectation of the city that the facility will result in a measurable reduction of homelessness in Eureka."

THE TOAST OF THE COUNTY

Everybody get a glass — it's time for the Journal's annual Best Of list. Our readers have once again voted on their favorite people, places, businesses, things to eat, drink and enjoy in our county. That includes everything from where to get the tastiest Bloody Mary to the finest midwife. This is our chance to toast the winners, as well as a couple of our favorite local characters. And like a good party, it turns out some of them are already pals, like the Best Musician, who happens to have a day job at the Best Bookstore. Who knew?

Here's to your besties, Humboldt. Maybe we'll see you at Saturday night's Best Of party at the Carson Block Building — if not, we'll raise a glass to absent friends. Cheers.

Serving up Smiles

For many children in Arcata and McKinleyville, the first harbinger of spring isn't a shift in the weather or fresh flower blooms unfolding on shrubs just waking up from a winter slumber.

Instead, the heralding of a change comes in the form of a robin-egg blue ice cream truck with flames melding from yellow to red painted on the sides that returns to their neighborhoods like clockwork each April.

Behind the wheel is McKinleyville native Paula Tweedy, who has been signaling her arrival for the summer season with tunes like "The Candy Man" ringing through the streets for nearly two decades.

There to greet her are gaggles of youngsters, dollar bills clutched in their tiny hands. But, that's not to say that kids are the only ones who look forward to seeing her.

"I think sometimes the grownups are just as happy about me coming as the kids are," she says.

Paula's road to becoming Humboldt County's first ice cream truck owner was paved by a matter of chance. She was visiting relatives in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, when she noticed little kids standing along the road.

When she was told they were waiting for the ice cream truck, Paula joined the group.

"My kids had never seen an ice cream truck," she says.

When Paula found out the owner had another truck for sale, something clicked. A stay-at-home mom with two young ones at the time, the truck seemed like a fun, family-friendly way to make a little extra money.

A short time later, her husband loaded the truck on a trailer and drove the small, van-like vehicle all the way back to McKinleyville. Her husband set about fixing the truck up and eventually they settled on the current design — decorated to resemble a race car.

"I wanted it to look cool," Paula recalls.

When not driving her regular routes, Paula also brings her truck to private gatherings and community events, including Wildwood Days in Rio Dell later this month. Over the years, she's become a community fixture in her own right.

Paula says she is still often asked about what happened to the little girl — her now pregnant 24-year-old daughter Alyssa — who began working as her helper 16 years ago and did so until her teen years made the job lose its luster.

And sometimes she's stopped by young men, their once boyish faces now obscured by mustaches and beards, who want to know if she remembers them.

The best part of the job, she says, is watching the children she once delighted now bringing their own children to enjoy the simple pleasure of buying ice cream from her truck.

"I don't make a lot of money, but I get to see the kids grow up," she says.

To contact Paula Tweedy, call 498-5165.

Best Taco Truck: Speedy Taco

Let us all now toast Speedy Taco, whose name is accurate and whose chile verde burritos are the perfect size and composition for sneaking into an afternoon matinee. First introduced to me when it would park outside of Broadway Cinema, I followed it down the street to its current incarnation at the parking lot of Sport N'Cycle, where the diligent guys behind the counter humor my broken Spanish and taunt my inability to handle spiciness on a weekly basis. The truck's commercial kitchen is in my neighborhood, meaning that at the right time of the day, I can walk past and be engulfed in the smell of taco truck heaven. Heaven, I tell you. Salud, Speedy Taco!

Best Place for a Birthday Party: Sequoia Park

Raise a SpongeBob paper cup for the sunny weekends spent festooning picnic tables at Sequoia Park, for those arriving early to snag a grill or the prized gazebo. May the slides that spill from the redwood tree's base be cool; may the woodchips under the swings be dry. And may the ice cream truck always roll up to save the day when you run out of cake.

Best Hobby Shop: S.T.I.L.

I'll admit it, I snickered a bit when reading that S.T.I.L. managed to take home this year's crowns for Best Head Shop, Best Vape Shop and Best Hobby Shop. Don't get me wrong — I'm sure they have all the vape pens, blunt wraps and "functional glass art" needed to lock down the first two honors. It was the last one that threw me for a loop. Maybe I'm a bit dated, but the term "hobby shop," in my mind, brings visions of model trains, scrapping materials and yarn. Maybe, I wondered aloud, Humboldt County's most popular hobby is just getting really, really high. So it was with a bit of a jaundiced eye that I wandered into S.T.I.L. recently to see what they had to offer up to the hobby enthusiasts among us. It turns out S.T.I.L. has a host of Roller Derby gear, all the way down to pink leather skates with black flames and a rainbow glitter helmet. They also have an impressive novelty sock collection, a host of bath supplies, a collection of Venus fly traps and enough incense varieties to keep the Humboldt State University dorms covered for the school year. So if fumigating the house with vanilla lavender incense, dropping a bath bomb and watching a mysterious carnivorous plant do its thing while unwinding after your latest Roller Derby match fall among your hobbies, this is your shop. And if you like doing all that while wicked high, I think you've found your people.

Best Hardware Store: Pierson's Building Center

Here's to Pierson's Building Center, whose staff have made my experience as a first-time homeowner a relatively easy ride. Sure, there's still a tarp on my roof and pickets falling off my front fence, but every time I walk through the front door of Pierson's and smell the free coffee, I'm inspired to do projects I never before thought possible. The staff have never "little lady'd" me, nor tried to upsell me on mildew-resistant anything. They've patiently cut lengths of wire that — upon inspection — were the wrong size, and cut another length again, without charging me. They've helped me flick through the color racks in the paint department, warned against splinters in the lumber yard and humored my poorly behaved dog when he leaped out of my truck looking for treats. And they're open at 7:30 a.m., meaning I can cruise through before work and feel like I've made a productive start to my day.

Geraldine Goldberg Can Do Anything

Geraldine Goldberg arrived in Humboldt County on the back of a motorcycle in 1981, soaked to the skin after traveling down from Portland in the midst of a February rainstorm. She fell in love with the place immediately.

"I was ready for an adventure," she says. She found one.

Goldberg and her partner moved into the woods near Whitethorn, a tiny town in Southern Humboldt where everyone hung out under a giant tree. There were no phones. Messages were left at the little store. It was a lot of fun. And there was a lot of drama. Guns were waved, hard drugs floated through the community and pot deals occasionally went wrong. Goldberg says she "didn't know enough to be scared." But then she got pregnant. The couple planned to buy a pistol on the day her water broke. It would be a few more hours before she went into labor and, by that time, it would be the middle of the night. Because her partner couldn't drive their truck (only a motorcycle), Goldberg drove herself to the hospital in Garberville while in labor. Their son Harry was born 10 minutes after she walked into the emergency room. He came home in a cardboard box.

When Harry was 2, the couple split up and Goldberg found work in Arcata. She moved in with another single mom in an apartment on 12th Street. School was cheap in the 1980s, so she enrolled at Humboldt State University, earning a bachelor's in social work at age 40. Being an older student was "exhilarating," she says. She went to work for KHSU, eventually writing a history of the station.

Between working, single-handedly raising her son and beating breast cancer three times, she earned her masters degree in sociology at the age of 50. Her thesis subject was Julia "Butterfly" Hill, whom she visited often during her 738-day sit-in of a redwood tree on Pacific Lumber Co. land. Goldberg still has fragments of the tree's bark in a necklace that she wears daily. She says the thesis has been checked out of the library dozens of times.

Now retired, Goldberg still volunteers at KHSU. She also launched the Arcata Plaza beautification project, helping plant the thousands of flowers that now decorate that space. She was once in charge of removing the garbage and ripped up petals after weekend bacchanals.

"There's a heartbreak of gardening in a public space," she says. "You have to take the heartbreak."

There's beauty sown in with the heartbreak. Geraldine Goldberg persists.

My beloved studded clutch bag, the throw pillow in my office with the hand painted face of a sad whippet, my daughter's first motorcycle jacket — I owe them all to you, Discovery Shop. Here's to your trippy window displays, the kitschy souvenir madness of your "global events" and the joy of rifling through other people's vinyl records, odd glasses and party dresses. Cheers to the donors and volunteers who keep it going. And to whoever drops off the steady stream of size 10 platform stilettos: Honey, you are an inspiration.

Best Parking Lot: Clam Beach Vista Point

Well, this is a bit awkward, seeing as the Clam Beach Vista Point isn't really a parking lot — hence the "vista point" in its name. Maybe I'm a being a bit of a stick in the sandy mud here, but I'm of the opinion that to qualify as a parking lot it must be a location where you actually park your car and leave it there: sitting and enjoying a view isn't enough. But seeing as there are really no standout parking lots in Humboldt County — I'm going to offer up a toast to what is hands down the region's worst, the small lot outside the WIC office in Old Town Eureka. The lot sits shaded by a huge tree, which might appeal at first glance. But don't be fooled. About six months of the year, the trees are populated by a virtual army of small birds. Now I don't know exactly what these birds eat but I do know they leave no car spared a thorough fecal dousing, the likes of which may land you at a carwash at 8 p.m. So here's to you, WIC lot, and your tree full of very angry birds.

The Faraway Nearby

Dan Kitchener's mural on Eureka's Buhne Building

By Gabrielle Gopinath
artbeat@northcoastjournal.com

Old Town Eureka twanged with the shock of the new last week when street artist Dan Kitchener unveiled an enormous new mural in its midst, the first to grace the city in several years. "Electric-City" is executed entirely in freehand spray paint on the east side of the Buhne Building at the corner of G and Second streets. It breaks with the pale masonry of the buildings around it, conjuring an illusion of deep perspective from a flat brick facade.

Kitchener's latest noir cityscape is a flickering neon matrix, all reflection and glare. We're staring into the dark heart of the metropolis. Neon signs tower above the street. Streaks and smears of color bleed from ads and traffic lights, reflecting in the city's rain-slicked surfaces. The mural makes no effort to perpetuate the line of the buildings around it. In fact, it negates the architecture, opening up an illusionistic boulevard that transects the Buhne building at right angles. It's almost as if the wireless links that connect devices and minds around the globe are more important than bricks and mortar.

The street scene is inspired by Kitchener's experience of the Shinjuku district of Tokyo, Japan. Kitchener completed the mural, his largest to date, in eight days. At a massive 50 feet high and 70 feet wide, it ranks among the city's biggest works of public art — a major statement, and not only in terms of square footage. Kevin Bourque of the Eureka-based Black Faun Art Project Group, who curated and sponsored the work's creation, said in a statement that he wants the piece "to represent the onset of a new phase in the development of Eureka as an arts community."

Kitchener, who lives in London and also goes professionally by the street art handle DANK, started working as a freelance mural artist after a decade-long career in animation and design, benefiting from the surge of interest in all forms of "street art" that the U.K.'s anonymous graffiti artist Banksy generated in the early aughts. Unlike Banksy, whose guerrilla approach to placing art in public space has typically required speedy execution, Kitchener works with building owners' permission and paints his murals on-site, rejecting stencils, grids, projections and other labor-saving tools that allow an artist to execute some of the work in advance.

He has secured numerous commissions for his signature cityscapes, completing works in England, Sweden, Italy, Cambodia, Vietnam, the United States and Canada — mostly on a similarly enormous scale. Last summer he completed his first project in the United States, a multi-story mural on the side of a Pittsburgh restaurant. Two days after completing "Electric-City," the globetrotting artist had already moved on to his next commission: a nightclub in the English city of Canterbury.

Bourque said that his decision to sponsor the mural was inspired by a recent trip to Art Basel in Miami, where he was impressed by the wealth of graffiti and street art in the Wynwood Walls district. He has said that he hopes this project will kickstart a new era of public art in Eureka, eventually resulting in "something like an annual summer mural festival that is inclusive of different styles of mural art around the world, while embracing the tone of this community."

Timeliness puts the "street" in street art. Rap music was created to be "the CNN of the streets," as Chuck D. of the groundbreaking group Public Enemy is credited with saying. Street art, which grew out of the grassroots complex of hip-hop-related art forms developed in and around New York City in the 1970s, has similarly been defined by its response to the moment.

While Eureka has a rich tradition of mural painting, the pace of new work has slowed in recent years. Duane Flatmo and the associates who worked under the aegis of the whimsically named Rural Burl Mural Bureau created dozens of murals in and around Eureka during the early 2000s, many of which are now beloved institutions. Bourque wants to see that period's dynamic spirit return.

"We have a lot of murals here; we're an artistically conscious community," he noted. "At the same time, it feels like we need new blood."

"Electric-City" stirred up modest controversy in the comments section of the Lost Coast Outpost, where evolving views on public art were on display. The unfamiliar urban imagery, so obviously not from here, displeased some viewers on principle. In addition, Kitchener's London roots generated a certain amount of discomfort. "Hire a local artist!" some said. Some commenters accused the work of "clashing with the architecture" or simply felt that it was "out of place." "Redwoods being parted by a river would've better suited this area," one commented.

Much critique was motivated by the shared assumption that murals should represent the place where they are located. But the commentariat could not agree on basics of the work's appearance. Did the nocturne vision look like Eureka, or did it not? Some residents said it did ("Have you ever gone Christmas shopping in Old Town Eureka, in the rain?"), while others angrily demurred. The unspoken assumption underpinning much of the criticism was actually the idea that murals should represent not just the place where they were made, but a particular vision of that place — in this case, one that would mesh easily with "Victorian seaport" branding.

Anonymous natterings about the ominous presence of "Asian writing" in Kitchener's mural, along with comments along the lines of like "looks like a South Korean puked on the wall. Demand a refund," made it clear that the knee-jerk hostility the mural elicited among a minority of respondents had a lot to do with the fact that it depicts a faraway Asian city populated by nonwhite people, whose cultural difference is perceived by some locals as a threat.

But the work inspired an equally passionate defense from locals, as well as satire in the Outpost by author and Eureka resident Amy Stewart. In a video interview, Kitchener said he enjoyed the fact that while he was painting, "around 50" local workers and residents came by to chat or just to rubberneck each day. Real-world response, he said, had been overwhelmingly positive.

Twenty-first century geography is connected in many ways. Existing socially, culturally and professionally in two or more places at once is the new norm in the "gig economy." The fantasy metropolis depicted in Kitchener's mural might look exotic but such cities are scarcely remote from area residents' concerns. Many people who choose to live here do so because digital technology gives them the option to live remotely while maintaining professional links to major urban centers that might be thousands of miles away, as the crow flies.

Quite a few of the murals around this city celebrate a sanitized version of the past and/or nostalgia for industries that provided the mainstay of the local economy 100 years ago. Love it or hate it, "Electric-City" serves as a timely corrective to these backward glances — a reminder that a world exists beyond the Redwood Curtain. In fact, it suggests that the well-worn curtain metaphor may no longer be that applicable.

Words, pictures, data, dollars and cents move instantaneously and unceasingly from one side of the world to another, making a border curtain about as relevant today as a border wall. Successfully defining regional identity will likely be more important than ever in a globalized, decentralized environment. But artists now misrepresent what regional identity means if they do not make the effort to show how regional and local issues are entwined with global dynamics.

Muralists of the future: Tell us something we don't already know! A city the size of Eureka has room for multitudes and there are still a lot of blank walls out there. ●

Dan Kitchener's mural can be seen on the Opera Alley side of the Buhne Building on the corner of Second and G streets in Old Town Eureka. Visit www.northcoastjournal.com to see a short documentary video about the mural's creation made by Black Faun Art Projects.

Shared Secrets

The mushroom cobbler recipe you'll never get

By Malcolm Terence
tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

The coveted mushroom cobbler at Brick and Fire.
File

It makes sense for restaurant cooks to be jealous of their best recipes. I remember years ago teaching myself to make croissants. Nena Creasy, a great cook who lived nearby above the Klamath River, even gave me a big marble slab to roll out the layers of dough with butter and then more butter. I tried making them with whole wheat flour, as though that would make them healthy, but they always flopped.

I heard of a health food bakery out along Interstate 5 that made them with whole wheat as light and flaky as their white flour cousins. I made the pilgrimage and the rumors were true. So I asked the baker how he did it. The guy exploded and almost threw me out of the joint.

I'd been a restaurant cook myself years earlier and most, but not all, the veteran cooks I knew shared everything. If somebody asked how I made our Hollandaise sauce, I'd tell them to look at page 357 in the 1979 edition of the Joy of Cooking. And I'd whisper, "Use the blender version. If you use the regular version you'll probably need two able-bodied helpers and a barometer."

In 2014, when my daughter Erica Terence was in charge of the vegetarian food at the Mid Klamath Watershed Council's annual fundraiser, she told me she was going to ask the cooks at Brick and Fire in Eureka how they made their mushroom cobbler. I thought she didn't stand a chance in the world.

At Brick and Fire, owner Jim Hughes and his staff of five to six cooks serve about 25 portions of the cobbler a day — each filled with a variety of wild mushrooms and infused but not drowned in a savory cream sauce. He likes the availability of wild mushrooms in Humboldt and has collectors who call him whenever they have a supply — especially fog-drip chanterelles.

One key to the cobbler's success is that Brick and Fire, located in an un-gentrified neighborhood along Eureka's F Street, is heir to a huge wood-fired brick oven. Hughes says it may have been the biggest factor in his decision to open the restaurant there seven years ago.

The massive oven was built 20 years ago. It measures 6 feet wide and 9 feet deep inside, and the cooks monitor the temperatures with a laser thermometer. Near the entrance it's 550 F and climbs about 100 degrees every foot closer to the flames. The cobbler cooks there quickly, very quickly.

Still, like many cooks, he is shy of spelling out the details of his recipes, including the cobbler, despite having made it on camera for Guy Fieri's Diners, Drive-ins and Dives. He says that a couple of his specialty items have already shown up on the menus at other restaurants in the community. Besides, Hughes is not a strict recipe kind of cook. "It's never the same thing twice," he says, "even though the title might be the same. I just like to keep exploring." Diners seem to find the explorations rewarding.

But when Erica talked to Hughes about the fundraiser, she said he was surprisingly forthcoming, not just with the trademark recipe, but with an invite to come work with the Brick and Fire cooks. The morning she showed up to work with the cooks was highly productive. "That's where you learn how slowly to cook the onions and little details like whether to use the better grade white wine or the other white wine."

Fortunately for the MKWC dinner, the little upriver town of Orleans has several brick ovens — none that big, but just as hot. Erica used one at Sandy Bar Ranch, a small eco-resort on the banks of the Klamath.

MKWC has crews out all over the landscape with projects on fisheries, fire protection, invasive weed control, watershed education, food security and more, and many staffers were happy to add wild mushroom collection for the mid-December fete to their chores.

It was not an easy dish to prepare, even in small portions. Still, the dish was a huge success, drawing carnivores to defect for the night. The 100 servings disappeared in a flash. Erica took it on again this winter, this time making 200 servings.

In the week before the event, volunteers, who themselves jealously guard secret hunting spots, started bringing mushrooms in. Tanya Chapple, who trained as a botanist at UC Berkeley and is director of the nonprofit's plants program, even found black trumpets, a mushroom variety prized for its taste and renowned for how hard it is to spot. Will Harling, a founder and director of MKWC, took advantage of a prime year for oyster mushrooms and contributed a bushel to the cause. Michael Eagan, who operates Mycality Mushrooms in Arcata, contributed several cases of shitakes and hericiums, the lions' mane mushrooms usually only found wild, and then inconveniently up the trunk of a tall tree. The stack grew and grew. Erica woke one morning to find a bucket of tanoak mushrooms on her doorstep. Other locals brought her chanterelles. There were also some cases of store-bought: creminis, dried shitakes and dried porcinis.

Again, it was a great success. "We still had a meat entrée," Erica said, "but we'd made so much of the cobbler that people no longer had to pretend they were vegetarians. We may take another year off before we make it again. You wouldn't want to do this too often — gallons of cream, buckets of wild harvest mushrooms."

As for replicating the dish at home, well, it took Erica more than a recipe to make the cobbler. She had neighbors with brick ovens and a flock of co-workers out in the woods during mushroom season.

I wondered the other day if I could have approached that guy years ago who baked the whole wheat croissants better than I did. I told the story to one of Orleans' great cooks. She nodded reflectively and grinned. "I can guess why he wouldn't tell you. He didn't want you to know that he mixed in white flour with the whole wheat — probably a lot. He needed to keep that secret. It was a health food place, right?"

Besides, it's a cook's right to keep secrets. I just won't tell them how I make that perfect Hollandaise.

Tangled Tales of Love

Love's Labour's Lost at Redwood Park

What happens when King Ferdinand of Navarre and his three companions decide to improve themselves by dedicating three years to study and fasting, forswearing women by forbidding any member of the fair sex from coming within a mile of the court? A challenging prospect in the best of circumstances, but when the Princess of France and her three ladies arrive on a state visit to discuss the secession of Aquitaine, the scholars' masculine resolve is sorely tested.

So opens North Coast Repertory Theatre's open-air production of Love's Labour's Lost at Redwood Park. The twists and turns of this fast-paced farce bear some untangling — spoilers ahead (if you can spoil a play that's more than 400 years old).

Don Adriano de Armado, a Spanish nobleman visiting the court, catches the rustic Costard in a tryst with the wench Jaquenetta and turns him in to the King for breaking the 1-mile rule. Plot twist No. 1: The Don is also enamored of the wench and sends an unknowing Costard off with a love letter for Jaquenetta.

So that the decree does not interfere with matters of state, the King agrees to meet with the Princess at her encampment outside the court. Plot twists No. 2 and No. 3: The King falls for the Princess and his companions fall for the ladies. Fickle creatures that they are, the men convince themselves that what they have actually been studying is love and dispatch carefully composed declarations of adoration to the ladies.

Plot twist No. 4: various letters get mixed up and misdelivered, resulting in plot twist No 5: Both ladies and gentlemen don disguises to hide their identities while broadcasting their passions. The play itself ends with unexpected plot twist No. 6: The gentlemen must prove themselves by waiting a year before any declarations of love can be consummated by marriage. Whether any will abide by this is up for speculation; as one of the gentlemen declares, "12 months and a day is too long for a play."

Santosh Hass as King Ferdinand, along with his companions Berowne (Charlie Heinberg), Dumain (Clint Forka), and Longaville (Zedekiah Minkin), all turn in nicely timed performances. Heinberg has a long history of performing Shakespeare in Humboldt, and displayed a masterful command of the play's sometimes complex language, but his fellow noblemen more than kept pace with him.

As the Princess of France, Chyna Leigh was at times hard to hear; hopefully her projection skills will improve as the run continues, as she does have a deft touch with the pointed one-liners. Her ladies — Jewel Blanchard as Katherine, Brianna Schatz as Maria and Caitlin Wik as Rosaline — deliver excellent performances on their 16th-century equivalent of a giggling girls' night out.

Anders Carlson is wonderfully entertaining as Costard, alternating between confusion and collusion, while his erstwhile paramour Jaquenetta is played with fun and flirtatiousness by Sarah Traywick. But the comic stars of this production are Morgan Cox as Don Adriano de Armado and Adrienne Ralsten as his page Moth. Cox's portrayal is a comedic masterpiece, complete with over-the-top accent and exaggerated gestures, and Ralsten is a delightful foil, tossing tidbits of tattletale-ing to the audience as he attempts to keep up with his lovesick master.

Rounding out the cast are Tyler Elwell as the Princess's attendant Boyet, Brian Pike as the aptly named Officer Dull ("I am Dull"), Ray Olson as the curate Sir Nathaniel, who attempts to bring some gravitas to the proceedings, and Rigel Schmitt in an almost-perfect impersonation of Drew Carey as the schoolmaster Holofernes.

Director Evan Needham moves the play along at a cracking pace, which occasionally causes some of the more complex lines to get lost, also a few of the actors — the blocking needs some work so that key characters are not hidden from half the audience's view at times when facial expressions are part of the action. Jared Sorenson's scenic design and construction works well in the challenging performance area, making smart use of the fixed elements — especially when Don Armado declaims dramatically from the roof.

The most confusing aspect of this otherwise well-executed production is the costumes. When we first meet the King and his companions, they are attired in World War II-era military uniforms. For the rest of the play, they and Don Armado mostly sport zoot suits — perhaps because they have moved from making rules to breaking them? Even less clear is the decision to dress the Princess, her entourage and the wench Jaquenetta in 1920s flapper dresses — particularly the latter, since Costard is costumed in standard-issue Shakespearean rustic tunic and breeches.

However, the play's the thing, so suspend (dis)belief and enjoy this delightful diversion. Love's Labour's Lost blends bawdiness and courtliness, history and fantasy, song and dance, to deliver an evening of comedy that will entertain, amuse and send you home with a smile on your face.

Remember to bring a blanket — while it's still light when the play ends a little after 9 p.m., it can get chilly under the redwoods in a Humboldt summer. Love's Labour's Lost runs Fridays and Saturdays at 7 p.m. through Aug. 19. Call 822-7091 or visit www.ncrt.net.

Continuing

Plays in the Park is also presenting Pam Service's family-friendly Merlin on Sundays at Redwood Park through Aug 20. Call 822-7091.

Humboldt Light Opera Company brings Gilbert and Sullivan's Ruddigore, with its schemers, lovers and cursed baronets to the stage from Aug. 11-20. Call 630-5013 or visit www.hloc.org. ●

Wicked Bugs: The Meanest, Deadliest, Grossest Bugs on Earth

Creepy crawlies for the kids.

Written by Amy Stewart, illustrated by Briony Morrow-Cribbs

Review by JoAnn Bauer
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Many benign and useful insects, spiders and arthropods do exist in the world, but you will not find them in this adaptation of Wicked Bugs: The Louse that Conquered Napoleon's Army & Other Diabolical Insects for young readers. Local author Amy Stewart is intrigued by the dark side of the bug universe; the dangerous, destructive and sometimes downright macabre (see the chapter on zombies). The thing about bugs is that there are so many of them. As Stewart warns in the introduction, "We are seriously outnumbered." And many of their adaptations for survival are at serious cross purposes with ours.

Divided into wicked categories, each bug is given a page or two describing the harm they do. The stories are not abstractions — whenever possible dates, places and sometimes names are given of those who have had interactions with the species. There is an immediacy in learning that it was a family in North Carolina who discovered they had bats living in their attic. Once they had bat-proofed their home, they found they had a worse problem. The African bat bugs that also lived in the attic now came downstairs to feed on the blood of the humans. These fascinating and horrific stories beg to be read aloud and shared.

This kids' version is somewhat abridged but Stewart does not soften the content or dumb down the vocabulary. What she does do is provide context for terms and concepts that might be unfamiliar to a younger audience. The main difference is in the formatting to make the information more attractive and accessible. This is a very handsome book, as the illustrations by Briony Morrow-Cribbs are very detailed and lifelike copper plate etchings. (You can watch the process for creating the bugs in a YouTube video.) Each chapter begins with a four-color etching of the bug in question and smaller etchings are scattered throughout. The bugs seem to be skittering and sometimes falling off the page, as if they are trying to escape the confines of the book.

Despite the accuracy of the illustrations, Stewart is clear that this book is not designed to be used as an identification guide. There is a section in back that does suggest useful resources and an excellent bibliography lists titles for further research.

On Saturday, Aug. 5 during Arts Alive!, Eureka Books will host the official release of the book. Beginning at 6 p.m., Amy Stewart will be available to autograph books and talk to readers of all ages. ●

Festivals and More Festivals

By Andy Powell

Marcia Griffiths takes the stage at 10 p.m. on Sunday, Aug. 6 during Reggae on the River, which runs Aug. 3-6.

Thursday

It's been festival season here on the North Coast for a bit now as we're well over a month into summer, but the jewel in Humboldt County's festival crown shines in SoHum starting today. The Mateel Community Center is putting on the 33rd Reggae on the River at French's Camp right before the Humboldt/Mendocino line. There will be more than 30 reggae and world music artists along with DJs, crafts, food vendors, camping and activities for the kiddos to boot all weekend long. You can peruse the enormous performance schedule, which boasts Slightly Stoopid, Assassin aka Agent Sasco, Sly and Robbie with Marcia Griffiths, Judy Mowatt and Cherine Anderson, Walshy Fire with Kabaka Pyramid and a host of others. Prices vary depending how many days you want to stay and if there's camping involved. DJs start around noon. Have fun, be safe and keep it mellow. Or irie. For the non-reggae crowd, you'll find folky fiddle tunes on the bill at the Mad River Brewery Tap room this evening at 6 p.m. played by Fingal for free. Out of Memphis comes "acid-tinged proto-punkers" Ex-Cult, who "bring their trademark technicolor, bad-trip vibes" to The Miniplex tonight. They're on the road supporting their recent release of Negative Growth bringing them all the way out to our West Coast. Of their album, recorded in Los Angeles, the press release states that it's a "nine-track nightmare, a death trip in the crystal ship." I don't know if that's a Doors reference but if so, I'll have to think about it for a while. Joining them is L.A.-based punk quartet Enemy and local punks Drown in Piss — what a way to go — and The Sturgeons. The show starts around 9 p.m. and $10 will get you in.

Friday

At the Outer Space on M Street in Arcata you'll find former locals Gunsafe returning to town. I don't recall exactly when this Americana/country/punk band uprooted itself but it's nice to hear they're returning while touring the States. This all ages show starts at 7 p.m. and the bill includes Bow Legged Buzzard and locals Lyndsey Battle with Cory Goldman doing the folky bluegrass thing, as well as local singer/songwriter and utterly charming musical maniac John Ludington with Andrea Zvaleko. Just $6 gets you in for this four-band bill. Up at Blue Lake's Logger Bar, Humboldt Free Radio Presents Duane Mark out of Lancaster — according to the press release — but from Austin, Texas from what I could find online. Let's just assume he's from Lancaster, California and Lancaster, Pennsylvania and Austin, Texas all together. He plays American roots music, so I guess that could work to a degree. He's joined at the Logger by local country/folk duo Gabe & Turtle, who'll be going on around 9 p.m. for free. Don't hesitate to throw some money in the tip jar for these musicians.

Saturday

Another festival is afoot today, this time in Blue Lake's Perigot Park. The Humboldt Folklife Society is putting on the 17th annual Buddy Brown Blues Festival, which helps raise funds for the Humboldt Folklife Society's Folk School. The festival starts off around 11 a.m. and is eventually headlined by local hero Buddy Reed & the Rip It Ups before Buddy heads out ol' Nashville way to do some recording from what I'm hearing. Before things get too ripped up, you'll hear from the Mad River Rounders, Blues Through the Years, Jenni & David and the Sweet Soul Band, Blues Rollers, and Uptown Kings who are all bringing you their take on the blues. Tickets are $12 for this day-long festival and don't forget the broad-spectrum sunblock. Starting at the same time, another one-day festival kicks off at Halvorsen Park in Eureka. A Music Extravaganza features True Gospel Singers, The Paula Jones band, The Arcata Interfaith Gospel Choir, Pat Holland and The Movers and The Shakers along with others and all for free. There'll be food, a motorcycle and car show, and skate ramps, as well. Although a free festival, donations benefit the Redwood Teen Challenge's proposed Women's Transitional Center. Elsewhere, The Yokels return to the Mad River Brewery Tap Room at 6 p.m. to play you some rockabilly soul for free. Arts Alive! kicks off in Old Town Eureka around the same time. For those of us not in the Facebook world, we'd be forgiven for not hearing anything about a show happening at the Siren's Song Tavern in Eureka tonight. I was tempted to not even mention the show as way to teach Colin of Electro Saloon a lesson in local show promotion, but seeing as how my wife is the other half of said band, I thought better of it. So let this be a lesson to you other musicians who have been doing this not quite as long as Colin. Some of us find Facebook to be a colossal waste of time — perhaps a column topic someday — and may not surf around that digital data collection monstrosity to find out about your show. Send a quick email (which stands for electronic mail) to music@northcoastjournal.com so this grumpy stick-in-the-mud can help promote your show. If you don't want help, I totally get it. Also on this bill tonight is above-mentioned Gunsafe and fellow locals Belles of the Levee. My wife informs me that the show starts around 8 p.m. and is free. George of Cafe Mokka tells me that they're hosting a duo who've been playing at Mokka for a decade — Kroy of Joe & Me is moving out of the area so tonight at 8 p.m. will be a special show. Hear the Greek tunes of the band before they go their separate ways. It's a free event and kids are welcome.

Sunday

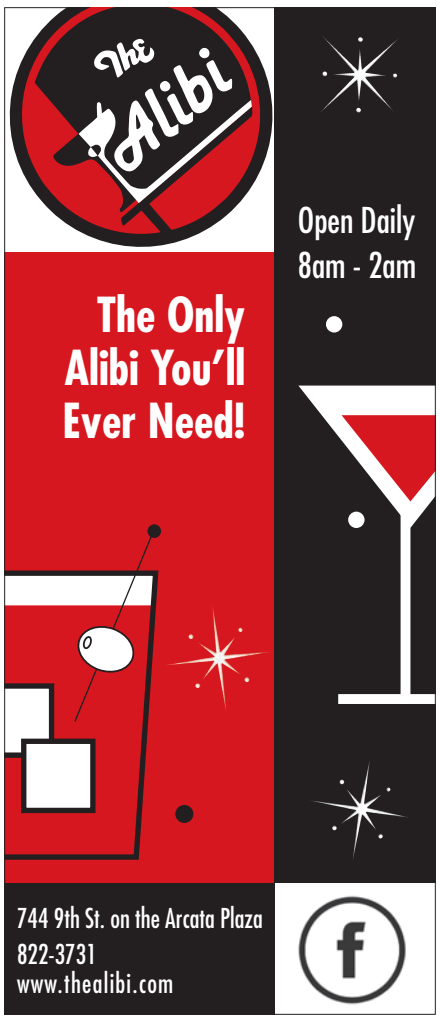

Jerry Garcia's birthday was just five days ago and the anniversary of his passing is in just three days. So doubly timely is an Acoustic Celebration of Jerry Garcia happening this evening at the Mad River Brewery Tap Room starting at 4 p.m. and running until about 8 p.m. Multiple local performers will be paying tribute to the man, so join them for this free celebration. The Outer Space in Arcata hosts a solo set from Ghost Mice singer/songwriter Chris Clavin who will not only play some folk/punk but will then also speak as the author of Free Pizza for Life and Cursed in Cairo. Other poets and authors will be a part of tonight's presentation which starts at 7 p.m. for just $5.

Wednesday

Local Dead Head Piet Dalmolen is back from the East Coast and playing his guitar for you this evening at the Mad River Brewery at 6 p.m. He does the solo guitar thing with loops and fancy fingerwork. If you leave a tip — it's a free show — I'm sure it'll be easy to get him to pay a tribute to Jerry. ●

Tell It Like It Is

Blues, the down-and-dirty foundation of most popular music — rhythm and blues, rock 'n' roll, rockabilly, country — tells our stories of suffering, sadness and sorrow, and how we rise up out of the mess and start all over. It connects us and sets our troubles free. The grit is real.

Lovers of the blues have a whole day of the good stuff when the 17th annual Buddy Brown Blues Festival slides into Blue Lake's Perigot Park Saturday, Aug. 5 with music starting at 11 a.m ($12, $10 advance, free for kids under 12).

Playing homage to the memory of Richard Duggins (better known as Buddy Brown), who opened the festival the first year and passed away shortly after, the festival is a showcase of the area's best blues musicians and is a benefit for the Humboldt Folklife Society Folk School Program. This year's headliner is bluesman Buddy Reed, known for rippin' it up with his band in spots around the county. Maybe you've read about him ("Buddy's Blues," July 13). Buddy's hitting the road, heading out on his "Road to Nashville" tour, and the 2017 fest is sending him off with some hometown love. Also bringing the emotion to the stage are favorites Mad River Rounders, Blues Through the Years, Jenni & David and the Sweet Soul Band, Blues Rollers and the Uptown Kings.

In addition to serving up tasty blues all afternoon, the festival's got beer from Lost Coast Brewery, fine local wine and smokin' barbecue from Blackberry Bramble BBQ.

Notorious

Twist!

If this week's national news cycle hasn't given you enough sudden plot turns, fear not. Well, fear a little — the Eureka Theater is showing a month's worth of Alfred Hitchcock films sponsored by the North Coast Journal.

Start the suspense on Friday, Aug. 4 at 7:30 p.m. with Notorious ($5). Ingrid Bergman and Cary Grant run hot and cold in this 1946 romantic thriller about a G-man who falls in love with the playgirl he sends undercover to bust Nazis hiding out in Argentina. Makes us nostalgic for the days when Nazis had to hide out.

On Friday, Aug. 11 at 7:30 p.m., see Farley Granger and Robert Walker make a killer deal in the 1951 classic Strangers on a Train ($5). The plan is to trade out murders — a father for a wife — so there's nothing to connect each man to the crime. But when one of them wants to back out, they go round and round.

Nowhere to go on Friday, Aug. 18 at 7:30 p.m.? There's room in the theater and at the Bates Motel when Psycho (1960) cuts loose on the big screen ($5). Anthony Hopkins and Janet Leigh star in this iconic Hitchcock screamer and just keep telling yourself that's just Hershey's syrup going down the drain. Hey, bring your mother.

In one final twist, the series wraps up on Saturday, Aug. 26 at 7:30 p.m. with The Birds (1963), sponsored by Seamoor's novelty shop. Tippi Hedren gets her feathers ruffled alongside Fred Taylor as flocks of angry birds dive bomb the residents of Bodega Bay.

Bring a sweater for the chills and get your popcorn early so you don't miss Hitchcock's cameos.

Reclaiming my time. Atomic Blonde

Trailer vs. Movie

And the real Atomic Blonde

By John J. Bennett
filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

ATOMIC BLONDE. So we return to the conundrum of The Good Trailer. On one hand, good trailers can surprise us like beautiful gifts. Because so many movies register as just above unwatchable these days, a lively little glimpse of something promising can be just the thing to get us through the long, dark night of the feature presentation. The trailers for Mad Max: Fury Road and Sicario made the desolate hellscape of cinema-year 2015 feel a little less bleak. They served as beacons of better things to come, distant mile-markers on a broken highway, giving some indication that, yes, it does get better. And they present a miniaturized version of cinema craft: tiny examples of the magic produced by the union of keen-eyed editing and the right piece of music. Two good trailers in a row can almost medicate against the ill effects of a whole bad movie.

However, a trailer can occasionally be too good for its own good. The examples cited above work as well as they do because they deliver just enough of the whole to leave the audience wanting more. They distill the essence of the source material, while retaining the fullness of its tone and texture. And ultimately, that is the highest purpose of a trailer: to suggest enough of the totality of a movie to make us eager to see it, without making us feel as though we already have. Someone — an editor, presumably — must decide what to include and what to excise. Should the trailer retain the pacing of the movie from whence it sprang? Should it be set to original music, an element of the score? Or to some rousing popular song that will win the audience over, with or without accompanying imagery?

When these decisions are made in a vacuum — in service of the trailer as its own work of art — these can get a little out of hand. The trailer becomes a short with a life of its own, separate but still connected to the thing it ostensibly represents. The trailer for David Gordon Green's Pineapple Express (2008), cut together from the more incendiary sequences and set to M.I.A's undeniable and ubiquitous "Paper Planes," made the movie look like the past, present and future of action movies — a perfect thing. The movie itself is not that, of course, though I love it very much. It is a stoner buddy comedy with a few shootouts that are not as well handled as the rest of the movie. And "Paper Planes" does not appear on the soundtrack. The trailer was a whole lot of fun, in and of itself. But it didn't summarize the tone and pacing of Pineapple Express; it gave glimpses of moments from within it. To approach the movie on its own terms took a second viewing, at least for me. (It's possible I assign too much importance to stoner buddy action comedies.)

Which brings us, in a roundabout way, to the beautiful problem of Atomic Blonde. I hung a lot of hopes on this one, based on the indelible effect of its trailer. The first time I saw it, some months ago, during a glut of soul-draining studio dreck, I brought it close to me and clung to it, heartened by its cold, blue glow. As we watched Charlize Theron's battered back emerge from an ice bath, as German cars careened gorgeously across rain-slicked Berlin streets, as our heroine brutally dispatched countless Soviet thugs, all set to a mash-up of "Black Skinhead" and "Personal Jesus," I saw hope for the future. That hope remains, though slightly altered.

The trailer for Atomic Blonde plays as if bespoke just for me. The pace, the ferocity of the fighting, the automotive eye candy, the selection of music all feel as if they were taken from some deeply pleasurable part of my subconscious. It is a fantastic little taste of the movie from which its constituent parts were drawn but it also sets up some unfair, or at least misaligned, expectations. One would expect that Atomic Blonde moves from car chase to fist fight with John Wick-ian pacing and certitude — wall-to-wall action. While there is ample excitement to be had, the trailer neglects to hint at the negative space within the movie, the deliberate pacing and slow humor, the nods to the long and storied history of espionage cinema that inspired it and to which it pays homage.

Berlin, 1989: as the wall between East and West begins to topple, Lorraine Broughton (Theron) arrives at the behest of MI6 and the CIA to clean up a mess involving the KGB and a purloined list of deep-cover operatives. She engages with David Percival (James McAvoy), an opportunistic British agent with a little self-made fiefdom and questionable motives, gains the trust of winsome French operative Delphine Lasalle (Sofia Boutella) and beats the living shit out of a bunch of big Russians.

Stuntman-turned-director David Leitch (uncredited as co-director on John Wick, 2014), aided by cinematographer Jonathan Sela, pours on the style here, recreating Cold War Berlin in exquisite, dense detail: a cool, gray world set off with pops of neon and suggestive windows lit from within. The fight choreography is exceptional, as expected, and Theron delivers a winking, knife-edged performance that suits perfectly. While Atomic Blonde doesn't sustain the full-throttle pacing I had expected, it might actually be all the better for its moments of space and quietude. R. 109M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK.

Previews

DARK TOWER. A boy who has visions crosses into another world just as the forces of good and evil are about to bring their eternal duel to Earth in this Stephen King adaptation. Starring Idris Elba and Matthew McConaughey. PG13. 95M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

DETROIT. John Boyega and Anthony Mackie star in this drama about people killed during the 1967 riots. Directed by Kathryn Bigelow. R. 143M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

ENDLESS POETRY. Chilean filmmaker Alejandro Jodorowsky's auto-biopic about joining the bohemian scene in his youth during the 1940s. NR. 128M. MINIPLEX.

KIDNAP. Thriller starring Halle Berry gives her minivan a workout as a woman pursuing her son's abductors. R. 82M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

LANDLINE. Sisters (Jenny Slate, Abby Quinn) come to grips with their messy lives and their father's affair in 1990s New York. R. 97M. MINIPLEX.

TOP GUN (1986). *Insert sound of shirtless Val Kilmer snapping his teeth at shirtless Tom Cruise in the locker room. PG. 110M. BROADWAY.

Continuing

THE BIG SICK. Kumail Nanjiani and Zoe Kazan star in a romantic comedy that breaks new ground as boy meets girl and girl goes into coma. Michael Showalter directs this deceptively simple, unassuming movie in which the deeply funny is juxtaposed with the devastating. R. 120M. BROADWAY, MINOR.

DESPICABLE ME 3. An out of work Gru (Steve Carell) returns to a life of crime, meets his long-lost twin and battles a villain stuck in the '80s (Trey Parker). With Kristen Wiig. PG. 156M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

DUNKIRK. Christopher Nolan's focused and intimate telling of this World War II story of pinned troops, outnumbered airmen and hail-Mary civilian rescue effort brings each character to life with the wave-action of hope and hopelessness. PG13. 106M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MILL CREEK, MINOR.

GIRLS TRIP. Almost 30 years after "Ladies First" dropped, Queen Latifah, Regina Hall, Jada Pinkett Smith and Tiffany Haddish star in this crass tale of four lifelong friends' trip to the Essence Festival in New Orleans. R. 122M. BROADWAY.

THE LITTLE HOURS. Quiet life in a medieval covenant turns decidedly lustful when a young servant fleeing his master takes refuge. The raunchy comedy boasts an all-star cast that includes Molly Shannon, John C. Reilly, Aubrey Plaza and Nick Offerman. R. 90M. MINIPLEX.

MAUDIE. Sally Hawkins stars in this biopic of arthritic artist Maud Lewis, who painted in Nova Scotia. With Ethan Hawke as her taciturn husband. PG13. 115M. MINOR.

SPIDER-MAN: HOMECOMING. Co-writer/director Jon Watts (Clown, 2014; Cop Car, 2015) makes good on a tremendous opportunity here, utilizing a talented cast to great effect and bringing the franchise back to its sweetspot. PG13. 133M. FORTUNA, BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

VALERIAN AND THE CITY OF A THOUSAND PLANETS. Luc Besson's comic book adaptation feels misconceived with its story of an idyllic planet ravaged by humankind, poorly constructed military intrigue and a thin love story. PG13. 137M. FORTUNA, BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

WAR FOR THE PLANET OF THE APES. Caser (Andy Serkis) sets out on a quest of vengeance after the apes are pulled into war with a ruthless colonel (Woody Harrelson). PG13. 150M. BROADWAY, FORTUNA, MINOR.

WONDER WOMAN. Director Patty Jenkins and company handle the seriousness of justice and love overcoming prejudice and hate without turning pompous, and still entertain with outsized battle sequences in this fine DC adaptation. Starring Gal Gadot and Chris Pine. PG13. 141M. BROADWAY.

Communication

CELEBRATING DIVERSITY AND INCLUSIVITY Deepen your understanding of yourself and tap into your inner wisdom. The community is invited to this workshop with Revs Bonnie and Andy Anderson at which we will explore our feelings about diversity as we create SoulCollage cards. SoulCollage is a dynamic, intuitive exploration into self-discovery using images and collage. It will allow us to look at diversity and inclusivity in a visual way. We will use scissors, glue, and images cut from magazines to create our cards. All materials are provided. It takes place on Saturday, August 5, 2017, from 10:00 a.m. until 12:30 p.m. at the Eureka Center for Spiritual Living, 239 Buhne Street, Eureka. Suggested donation is $20 - $25. Call 707 443-5743 for more information. (C-0803)

TENSION BETWEEN SCIENCE AND RELIGION EXPLORED AT LIFETREE CAFÉ Perceived conflicts between religion and science will be discussed at Lifetree Café on Sunday, August 6, 2017 at 7:00 p.m..The program, titled "Science and Religion: Can They Coexist?"features a filmed interview with Brother Guy Consolmagno, a scientist with the Vatican Observatory. "Science is understanding, seeking truth. Religion is truth, seeking understanding,"says Consolmagno. "They are on the same road."During the program, Lifetree Café participants will also discuss potential clashes and commonalities between the two ideologies. Admission to the 60-minute event is free. Lifetree Café is located Corner of 13th Street and Union, Arcata. Lifetree Café is a place where people gather for conversation about life and faith in a casual, comfortable setting. Questions about Lifetree may be directed to Pastor Bob at 707-672-2919 or robertdipert@gmail.com (C-0803)

On 8/11/2017 at 11:00 AM, CLEAR RECON CORP., as duly appointed trustee under and pursuant to Deed of Trust recorded 5/26/2006, as Instrument No. 2006-15428-17, of Official Records in the office of the County Recorder of Humboldt County, State of CALIFORNIA executed by: BRUCE TURNER, AS TO AN UNDIVIDED ONE-THIRD INTEREST, AND CONSTANCE M TURNER, AS TO AN UNDIVIDED ONE-SIXTH INTEREST, CONSTANCE M TURNER, AS CUSTODIAN FOR, AND DEVON S. TURNER, A MINOR, UNDER THE CALIFORNIA UNIFORM TRANSFERS TO MINOR ACT, AS TO AN UNDIVIDED ONE-SIXTH INTEREST AND, AND RONALD TURNER, AS TO AN UNDIVIDED ONE-THIRD INTEREST WILL SELL AT PUBLIC AUCTION TO HIGHEST BIDDER FOR CASH, CASHIERS CHECK DRAWN ON A STATE OR NATIONAL BANK, A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL CREDIT UNION, OR A CHECK DRAWN BY A STATE OR FEDERAL SAVINGS AND LOAN ASSOCIATION, SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, OR SAVINGS BANK SPECIFIED IN SECTION 5102 OF THE FINANCIAL CODE AND AUTHORIZED TO DO BUSINESS IN THIS STATE: IN THE FRONT ENTRANCE OF THE HUMBOLDT COUNTY COURTHOUSE, 825 5TH STREET, EUREKA, CA 95501 all right, title and interest conveyed to and now held by it under said Deed of Trust in the property situated in said County and State described as: MORE FULLY DESCRIBED ON SAID DEED OF TRUST The street address and other common designation, if any, of the real property described above is purported to be: 2612 M STREET EUREKA, CA 95501 The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the street address and other common designation, if any, shown herein. Said sale will be held, but without covenant or warranty, express or implied, regarding title, possession, condition, or encumbrances, including fees, charges and expenses of the Trustee and of the trusts created by said Deed of Trust, to pay the remaining principal sums of the note(s) secured by said Deed of Trust. The total amount of the unpaid balance of the obligation secured by the property to be sold and reasonable estimated costs, expenses and advances at the time of the initial publication of the Notice of Sale is: $156,304.66 If the Trustee is unable to convey title for any reason, the successful bidder's sole and exclusive remedy shall be the return of monies paid to the Trustee, and the successful bidder shall have no further recourse. The beneficiary under said Deed of Trust heretofore executed and delivered to the undersigned a written Declaration of Default and Demand for Sale, and a written Notice of Default and Election to Sell. The undersigned caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (800) 280-2832 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.AUCTION.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 050423-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. FOR SALES INFORMATION: (800) 280-2832 CLEAR RECON CORP. 4375 Jutland Drive Suite 200 San Diego, California 92117
